About This Project

The Washington Statewide Transportation Framework Project (WA-Trans) is organized to create an electronic map of transportation data for use in Geographic Information Systems (GIS) applications across the state. This transportation data (called the transportation layer) will work with other statewide layers being developed or in existence including hydrography (water ways), cadastral (property boundaries), and orthophotography (aerial images rectified for elevation and other factors). For more detail please read the Executive Summary.

WA-Trans is ramping up for a new effort. A new full-time project manager has been hired and an effort is being made to re-engage existing partners, identify new partners and establish project plans and funding. Regular quarterly stakeholder meetings have begun and a steering committee is being established. It is expected that the steering committee will meet monthly and will be much more actively involved in regular decision making and to some degree in overseeing project deliverables. A paper called "White Paper on Issues and Strategies for Building a State Transportation Framework" has been written by Ken Dueker a Professor of Urban Studies at Portland State University (PSU) who has
